There are thousands of race-goers right here in town during that month who feel they can't afford to travel to the Spa. They are forced to payrons. Fresh from a round of domestic infelicity the side-wheel terror of Siunberville comes into our midst guarded by a human bloodhound and kept continually in leash. He is turned loose every afternoon on the baseball field and permitted to graze at will. When the game is over and the day is done, it is back on the chain for Rube and a night of the simple life.

Thus was the ruling of the Philadelphia Magistrate who spared George Edward to the Athletics that he might bring laurels back to his native heath in other words, Rube is on probation. This spring he amazed the South by performing the same feat at the country of a small-pox scare. Rube's father wears them almost to his knees, and a fumigation would never do, as it might disclose some of the secrets of Rube's early youth, which he thinks early still hidden in those whiskers. Anyway, he was brought back to civilization and renewed his wonderful work in the box. Many managers have turned gray worthing over the erratic pitcher and his eccentricities. In fact, Connie Mack is the only person who has ever been able to manage him except his knees.
